I am using the firebase-ui library for a part of my app. This app is built using cordova. The issue I am facing is that I need to access a property of the firebase-ui's Analytics property on the cordova side. I am trying to access this property using cordova.plugins.firebase.analytics.service.analytics(). As seen in this issue, they chose to provide an anonymous bind instead of exposing the properties that are needed in the cordova side. I am unable to find any examples of how to do the bind in this case or any other cases where this happens. With regards to the question of accessing the properties on the main thread, there are many answers to this question. The question here is how to access the properties on the main thread when the service is not created by your code. A: //create a thread safe observer firebase.database().ref("").child(path) .on("value", function(snapshot) { var val = snapshot.val(); //firebase data isn't parsed instantly setTimeout(function() { //do something here console.log(val); }, 1000); }) I tried above and for those of you who are wondering, this is exactly how I solved my case. Not ideal but this is how you can solve it. Here I am using the observer() method in order to listen to the data. Not sure
