1. Field of the Invention
The present invention relates to a transfer molding die for molding articles of footwear, including athletic footwear, and more particularly relates to a die assembly having a valve gate.

2. Description of Related Art
In the manufacture of footwear, in particular athletic footwear such as basketball shoes, it is often desirable to mold different areas of the footwear article, particularly the upper, for unique needs of different wearers. For example, the toe portion of the upper may include a narrow, pronounced toe box for better fitting the wearer's foot, while the rest of the upper has a wider, more comfortable volume. A molded shoe upper generally requires several molding steps to provide both the narrow toe box and the wider rest of the upper. Prior art techniques for producing such footwear articles generally require different dies for various portions of the upper to be molded. However, the use of a plurality of dies has the disadvantages of relatively high die cost, multiple step molding process, and the required use of a greater amount of expensive metal molding material. Several manufacturing processes have been developed that generally employ two dies that are aligned and moved toward each other to mold the desired areas of the article. While these two-die techniques eliminate the need for multiple molds for articles having varying designs, prior art two-die processes have not adequately addressed problems associated with designs that include sharp corners and/or a complex shape. Accordingly, there is a need for a transfer molding die assembly having a valve gate that can be used to mold articles of footwear having both relatively complex designs and sharp corners.
